Catalogue of Minolta's model MS-R1100 Digital Image Filing System.
"Zenza Bronica Camphoto VX3000", Photographic Industries, June, 1994,
Vol. 52, No. 6, pps. 12-15.

The relevance of the three Japanese patent applications is discussed in the background portion of the specification. In addition, to assist the examiner's understanding of these references, English abstracts are being submitted for published application Nos. 5-75902 and 3-271730. With respect to published application No. 63-192773, the reference discloses an image capturing device having an integrated film camera 1 and a video camera 2. A frame number is output from the film camera, and converted into a character signal in a character generator 3. The character signal is mixed with the video signal from the camera 2 in a mixer 4. The combined signals are recorded on a tape 6 by means of a video tape recorder 5.

The Minolta MS-R1100 described in the catalogue is a digital image recorder which can systematically record and retrieve high-quality images to and from a magnetic tape in large quantities. For the examiner's reference, information related to this product is described in copending application Serial No. 07/949,579. This identification of the pending application is not to be construed as a waiver of the confidentiality afforded that application under the provisions of 35 U.S.C. §122, but is being provided for the examiner's consideration in compliance with 37 C.F.R. §1.56.

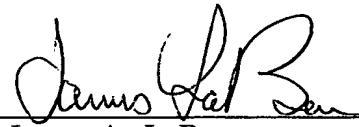

Portions of the article from Photographic Industries have been outlined and labelled with the numbers 1-4. Translations of these portions are being submitted herewith, and are labelled with the corresponding numbers.
